Montclair Academy Notes.

The academy second team defeated the Belleville High School last Friday evening by a score of 21-12. It was a splendid clean game, well played.

The first team was defeated by the St. Paul's School, Garden City, last Saturday by twelve points. Score 24-12.

The academy and its friends are indebted to Mr. W. W. Clark, gymnasium master, for the very delightful entertainment given last Saturday evening by the Yale Gymnasium team. The team has held the intercollegiate championship for two years and its work is of a very high grade. It gave an exhibition of work on the horse, parallel bars, flying rings, horizontal bar, and tumbling, and Mr. Everhart gave a very novel performance with a jumping rope and with dumb-bells.

Joseph M. Thoms, '12, has been elected baseball captain.

The third basketball team recently held its election for captain and voted for Rudolph Deetjen, '16.

The mid-year examinations are occupying the time and attention of the students of the academy. The second dance of the year was held last night. Mrs. MacVicar received the guests.

The next basketball game scheduled is February 9 with the Glen Ridge High School. The game will be played in the Montclair Academy gymnasium at 3 o'clock.

There will be a swimming meet with the High School of Commerce at 10 a. m. February 10.

The members of the Kodak Klub are busy preparing for the preliminary exhibition to be held early in February. A first prize in each of two classes will be awarded. There are twenty-four active members and three honoraries.

Indeed, he made himself and what he spoke of interesting to all except the viscountess, who declined to be interested by any man in a suit of overalls. When they left his department Gladys was much pleased at the young man's offer to show them over the balance of the work and accepted it with thanks. She was somewhat surprised that he should encroach upon parts of the factory under other foremen, but he made no explanation of the matter, and it was soon forgotten in the interest he excited in what they were seeing. When they were ushered out to their conveyance Lady Hurlleigh dropped a silver dollar in the foreman's hand, much to her daughter's mortification. Seeing her embarrassment, he showed a delicacy far above his station by accepting the tip as a matter of course.

This was the last visit Lady Hurlleigh made with her daughter to any of the commercial or mechanical wonders of America. After that she told Gladys that she might go where she liked if she would only cut it short so that they might get back to England, and in a few weeks they sailed for home. The poor woman had met with a great disappointment.

At the opening of the next season when the "American invasion" of England, as the English people call it, begins of our tourists to Europe, began, persons whom Lady Hurlleigh and her daughter had met in America commenced to send in their cards. The younger of these persons the viscountess left to her daughter to entertain. Gladys, who had been much pleased with the freshness, the absence of sham among the masses, that she had found in America, surprised her mother by doing the honors successfully. Indeed, Gladys was far more attentive to them than her mother considered necessary, for the older lady not having gained anything from her visit was disposed to let the visitors see England by themselves.

Few young American men put in an appearance and these the viscountess left entirely to Gladys, seeing none of them herself. One day a Mr. Edwin Atherton called, and the card being taken to Lady Hurlleigh, raising her glasses to read the name and not recognizing it, she sent it to her daughter with a request that she receive the visitor. Some time after that when Mr. Atherton called again, Gladys, who was dressing, asked her mother to go down and entertain him till she had finished her toilet. The viscountess did as she was asked, and though she felt sure she had seen Mr. Atherton before could not place him. Nevertheless, to the manner born, she greeted him as one she remembered perfectly, but was careful to keep the conversation on general topics that she should not betray her ignorance of his identity. Her daughter appearing, she turned the guest over to her and, excusing herself, left the room.

It was not long before Lady Hurlleigh noticed that Mr. Atherton was becoming a frequent caller. One day she asked Gladys who he was and where in America they had met him. But Gladys' identification was not especially clear, and her mother got but little satisfaction. The American's calls continuing and certain attentions coming from him to Gladys that indicated more than an ordinary interest, the fond mother made another effort to learn from her daughter something about him. All attempts failed, but after one of Mr. Atherton's calls, Gladys went to her mother radiantly happy and, handing her an American silver dollar, said:

"Mr. Atherton asked me to give this to you for one of your charities."

The viscountess looked at the dollar then at Gladys. Something in the girl's face excited a desire for further information.

"Do you remember, mother, when we were in America visiting a factory being shown over the premises by a foreman and you tipping him when we went away?"

"It seems to me I do."

"Well, that's the identical dollar you gave him."

The mother looked stupefied, and the daughter continued: "That foreman is the son and heir of the founder and principal owner of those works. In America, it seems, the sons of manufacturers sometimes go into their fathers' works to learn the business, occupying successively every post from the lowest grade. This Mr. Atherton is one of these persons. He has finished his apprenticeship and has come abroad on a vacation before assuming the vice presidency of the works of which his father is president."

Lady Hurlleigh listened to this with intense interest. When Gladys had finished she said:

"Are you quite sure, daughter, that he has not come on any other account than a vacation?"

"He has, mother," replied the daughter, blushing. "He has told me that, after having shown us the factory, he made a resolution that he would follow me to England with a view to winning me for his wife."

"And you have accepted him?"

"I have."

There were counter currents in the mother's heart. The idea of her daughter marrying a mechanic that she had seen in overalls and whom she had thought it proper to tip was a terrible shock to her, but when she learned that the young man was heir to millions she was mollified, and when he was presented to her as her future son-in-law she received him as well as could have been expected under the circumstances.

Atherton is now attending to business in America, where he and his wife live. Mrs. Atherton boasts that she is the only Englishwoman who ever attacked the American matrimonial market so far as she knows, and carried away a prize.
